Natalie Gutierrez
Medium: Graphite Pencil
Professor Eric Tucker: Drawing II

This piece was for my Drawing Two class. The assignment was to draw a still life drawing. I created multiple sketches before starting the drawing. After drawing multiple sides of the still life, I chose this one specifically because I liked the way it was placed. I wanted my drawing to be accurate with the measurements and sizes of the objects. Also, I tried to put in as much detail as possible, especially with the glass bottle in my drawing and to have a smooth surface. The media I used was graphite pencil, and I rendered the objects first. Then, I would smudge it, and finally, if it needed more value, I would shade it in darker and then blend it. I enjoyed rendering the objects and challenging myself to create a drawing with multiple objects.

Aramis Hatcher
Medium: Graphite Pencil
Professor Eric Tucker: Drawing I

The drawing is the student's response to the midterm project. They were asked to draw a still life that demonstrates the concepts and skills developed in the first half of the semester. This included working with light and dark to develop the illusion of space, mass and volume, drawing with values, vertical placement and overlapping to imply depth, measuring to recreate accurate proportions, and rendering surface qualities. Aramis Hatcher's drawing exceeded all expectations for the project.

The goal of the assignment was to make a collage using pictures of food. I used various pictures of coffee to create this piece. I used Photoshop to make the collage of coffee. I especially enjoy using photoshop because it's easier to use and get used to.

“YumMy”

Medium: Acrylic Painting on Canvas

Professor Amy Babinec: Painting II

My artwork is a painting of lips that look like they are coming forward from the rings, like in a cartoon. I was inspired to create this artwork by watching a cartoon where a girl was eating a cherry, and I knew I had to pause it and run to get my sketch book to draw it. My favorite type of art is Pop Art and Bratz Dolls. I choose the title “YumMy” for the Justin Bieber song “Yummy,” and switched it up, so half of the title is “Yum” and the rest is “My” for “Oh My.” I used oil paint for the lips and acrylic paint for the black and yellow rings. I used a hard brush to create the realistic look of the lips. I wanted the rings to start small then get larger to go around the lips to show the lips coming forward.

The piece tells that just by making something so simple it can turn out to be better. Throughout my life I have wanted to create paintings that looks like they are moving. At first I had a hard time drawing lips, but now I can make body parts look amazing. Throughout the world, as time moves forward, we move FORWARD.

Medium: Digital Graphics

Professor Pamela Planera: Computer Art II

This piece was an assignment for my Computer Art 2 class in February. The goal was to use only photoshop brushes to create digital art instead of using images. You had to use the tools in photoshop as a way of painting and drawing rather than a image composite. For my piece I created a tarot card.

The software used for this piece was Photoshop using the brush tool which takes the shape that can be repeated and painted a different color. I enjoyed learning about the tool itself.

The message for the artwork that I would like the viewer to understand is that this is not a real tarot card, but one that I made up. The actual tarot card deck holds many meanings and this one displays the feeling of looking towards the future while waiting or dreading it. It's always fun when you see your work come together just how you see it in your head.

“Allover Pattern Design”

Medium: Acrylic Painting on Canvas

Professor Amy Babinec: 2D Design

The reason for this artwork was for an assignment in my 2D Design class. The goal of the assignment was to make a design that uses an allover pattern. The design also had to have color in some way. The media that I used to make this artwork were acrylic paint, sharpie, white paint marker, and a canvas. I first painted the background and blended all the colors to make a gradient. Once that dried, I divided the canvas into equal parts and placed dots on the lines. Then, I drew curved white lines that connected to the closest dot until the canvas was filled. Near the end, my white paint marker ran out. As a result, I ended up going over the white and finishing the piece with a black Sharpie marker. Something I really enjoyed about using the paint and the process is the blending of the paints to make a gradient, because I like to do that when I paint other things.
